W(What's in a)RD?

By Charles E. Ross

Your brain, like the rest of the body, occasionally needs a break—a time for fun and relaxation. Brain teasers have always provided a playful outlet for the mind. One of the most popular involves creative new ways to express familiar words, phrases and titles. For example:

We shall come is "We shall overcome"; Sepcutember is "See you in September"; and Keats Keats translates as "Parakeets" (pair of Keats).

To give your brain a much-needed break, let your imagination run wild over the following items. They're tough, even infuriating, so be patient and don't expect to solve them without considerable creative effort. Trying them with family or friends adds to the fun, but perhaps the greatest pleasure of all—once you know the answers—is inflicting them on others.

I'm called Dennis — Non Profit Research Educator

I direct the Ce.A.E. where we study the relationship between language and behavior

Your mind/voice/etc doesn't have to be your enemy. Many problems are a result of the assumptions made for us by English.

The rational mind can serve transformation.

the most powerful tool to influence personal/social/planetary behavior is language.

If you want to do something selfish and altruistic simultaneously, clear up your thinking/~~semantics~~

Each of us emanates a wave of information/language. Every interaction you have with a human ~~when I is present~~ contributes to either more clarity or more confusion. By taking responsibility for clearing up your own thinking and communications you are engaging in the politics of planetary evolution/transformation.

the Center for Applied Epistemology is here to support your efforts.

we're disappointed that → If you think in English your confused.

Many of our problems as individuals and as a ~~culture~~ are the direct result of ~~our~~ assumptions made for us by our language.

It is not inevitable that the rational mind should hinder ~~the~~ transformation of individuals/organizations/~~or the~~ Earth. The mind is not our enemy — unconscious assumptions are.

Language is the most powerful tool to influence personal/planetary behavior.

Each of ~~us~~ generates ~~a~~ expanding wave of information. Every human meeting contributes either to greater clarity or confusion. By taking responsibility for clearing up your ~~own~~ own thinking + communications you are engaging in the politics of planetary evolution.

If you want to do something both selfish and altruistic simultaneously. Clear up your language/your thinking. By helping yourself, you help me, you help Earth.

LANGUAGE AND PEOPLE
J. F. WALLWORK

Language and Reality

It was suggested at the end of the last chapter that we have to look at the relationship between language and reality. It is probably easiest to do this when looking at the language of a young child, for both his language and his life are relatively uncluttered and simple. Michael Halliday took this as a starting point for discussing the functions of language and in an article entitled 'Relevant Models of Language' he reported his attempts to ascertain by observation the relationship between a child's life and his language. Halliday suggested that the child, at an early age, discovers at least seven 'models' of language. Firstly the child soon learns that language is a way of getting things done. I can remember my own daughter, before she had started talking, one day leading her grandmother across the room, holding up her arms to show she wanted to be lifted up, then leaning out from her grandmother's arms to grasp the window catch and gesturing quite unmistakably that she wanted the window open. A few weeks later, she had learnt that it was equally effective (or ineffective) to point, and say imperiously, 'Open!' She had become aware of the instrumental function of language.

Perhaps even before this, the child has experience of the fact that other people use language to control him. The child crawling round the room may fiddle with an electric socket; he may be smacked and may hear 'No!' very firmly said; before long, he is going up to the socket, surveying it and the adult in turn, and saying 'No' himself, thereby controlling his own actions. This regulatory model of language is one which probably plays a very important role in his socialisation. The language in which this regulatory function is learnt, and the contexts in which it is learnt, may have very profound effects on his life. Both of these uses of language also, of course affect in some way the relationships between the child and other people, and the child develops early on an awareness that language affects other people's attitude to him. Some of his feelings for his mother, and of his mother for him, may be expressed physically with hugs, kisses, smacks, hand-pulling and so on, but much is expressed through words, and this is of course even more true of adults other than his parents. The interactional model of language has an important role in the life of a young child, not only in relation o parents and other adults, but also, a little later, to his peers, not ast in sorting out who 'belongs' and who does not. But if he needs anguage to help him to relate to his parent or in order to earn ceptance with his peers, he also uses it to be himself—to be an dividual. This personal use of language is illustrated in his question-ng about himself and his role, he may use a question that is also in me measure an assertion: 'I am good, Mummy?'; he may objectify mself and his feelings: 'Johnnie tired now' or 'Johnnie hates you' an attempt to measure himself in his world. But another form of uestioning, with quite a different function, is not long in developing.

he endless questions designed to enable him to find out about ings, about reasons for things, to ask not only 'what?' but 'why?'
nd 'what for?' reflect his awareness of language as having a uristic function. Many future attitudes may be influenced, by the ay in which responses are made to the child's attempt to use nguage in this way. This model of language, it is suggested, is veloped or stunted by the extent to which it provides him with tisfaction or not, with answers he can cope with, or with snubs, th reciprocal questions that turn his attention to related matters, r with boredom and indifference.

So too, with another use of language, the imaginative, which is not ecessarily only fantasy, but is poetic in a wider sense. Anthony, uoted at the beginning of the first chapter, spent hours playing ith sounds and patterns of language, in what are ultimately maginative, poetic ways; my own son, at a later age, delighted in xploring the possibilities of the sound [ti:], relating it to his nursery hool alphabet, his drink (tea) his shirt (tee) and his sister's laugh, nd trying to see what other uses he could make of it.

But the use of language that seems all-important to most adults, at of passing on information, often seems singularly unimportant a child. This representational model of language he learns about, oner or later, but it appears to be much less important to pass on e message from teacher than to ask why the rain is wet.

So these seven models, instrumental, regulatory, interactional, ersonal, imaginative, heuristic and representational, together show ow a child, through language, constitutes for himself a 'world view' hich incorporates perceptions of himself and others, in relation to th objects and feelings. But this relatively simple account of nguage and life interacting soon becomes complicated.

Dear fellow Earthling/human

I wish to appologize for ~~th~~ my lack of integrity with regards to paying my bill on time. The fact is I've been quite irresponsible in ~~with~~ regard to my financial dealings. I am in the process of correcting this situation now.

I cannot send you any money with this letter, but I want you to know that it is my absolute intention to pay you everything I owe. Please be patient with me and you will get your payment before the first of the year.

Thank You for your consideration

Missing ships: Did the hydrates do it?

It is well-known lore in legend and in nautical and aviation history that sometimes, for no apparent reason, ships and low-flying aircraft fail and perish while traveling over ocean waters. Richard D. McIver, a Houston-based oil industry consultant, in the June AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PETROLEUM GEOLOGISTS BULLETIN identifies a possible culprit: gas hydrates. Hydrates — gassy ice — form, depending on seawater temperatures, at depths of 300 meters or 400 meters or more. As an ice-like substance, hydrates could form a fairly solid, dome-like seal that could trap pools of natural gas. If the seal were broken suddenly, the gas could escape rapidly, breaking into ever-smaller bubbles as it ascended to the surface. A vessel sailing through this gassy patch of water could lose buoyance and sink quickly, McIver says. Likewise, given a sufficient amount of gas, a plume of free gas could burst above the ocean surface, an event that could induce engine failure in a low-flying aircraft that encountered the concentrated gas. Intermittent gas blowouts, McIver writes, "might explain some of the many mysterious disappearances of ships and planes — particularly in areas where deep-sea sediments contain large amounts of gas in the form of hydrate."

The preceding is a "rational scenario," says Roland von Huene of the United States Geological Survey in Menlo Park, Calif. However, he says, his experience in drilling well into hydrate layers on Legs 67 and 84 of the Deep Sea Drilling Project (SN: 8/25/79, p. 133; 4/3/82, p. 231) has not convinced him that the hydrates form a solid layer, even though they show up on seismic profiles. "What we've encountered up to now is only a disseminated form of the hydrate, and no large continuous layers." McIver's theoretical scenario, he says, would occur under conditions "that are quite different from what has been sampled to date."

Part of the significance of the hydrates other than the hazard they may pose for surface and low-flying vehicles is that a rapid shift of bottom sediments could endanger drilling vessels and oil-drilling platforms. The Glomar Challenger, for instance, has never intentionally drilled completely through a hydrate layer because the drill lacks safety mechanisms needed to prevent blowouts. It is possible, says von Huene, that DSDP drills did penetrate through gas hydrate layers before their existence was known. A drop in pressure or increase in temperature might cause hydrates to decompose and revert to a fluid state. Such a change may be responsible for transporting huge quantities of sediment, McIver writes, and may be related to such seafloor phenomena as mud volcanoes and mud flows.

How the cosmos got its first lumps

Cosmology has a number of fundamental problems. One of the worst is how matter was able to form clumps and aggregations. On every scale of the universe, from protons to galaxy clusters, matter is articulated in organized concentrations, yet the big bang theory of the universe's origin does not account for them. It yields a smooth undifferentiated gruel of matter.

Cosmologists have generally thought — or perhaps feared — that the only way to account for organized concentrations of matter was to muck up the primal simplicity of the big bang by putting in primordial density fluctuations around which later concentrations such as galaxies could condense. Now a theory propounded in the Aug. 5 NATURE by Matt Crawford and David N. Schramm of the University of Chicago shows how to avoid this unsatisfying ad hoc procedure, at least for the earliest articulations of matter.

The theory deals with a time when the universe was three millionths of a second old. At that epoch the cosmos consisted of a smooth homogenous mix of quarks and antiquarks, the structural elements and predecessors of matter, and electromagnetic radiation. It is just the expansion of the universe that causes quarks and antiquarks to clump together to make subatomic particles. No insertion of primal lumps or density fluctuations into the theory is necessary.

This happy state of affairs comes about because of the nature of the force that attracts quarks to one another, which is called for technical reasons the "color force" or chromodynamic force. As experiments with the most recently discovered families of subatomic particles, those designated by the Greek letters psi and upsilon, have shown, the attractive force between quarks gets stronger the farther the quarks are from each other. This is quite a strange property compared to the behavior of well known forces such as electromagnetism or gravity, which all get weaker as the distances between the bodies involved get longer. The color force does the opposite, and that is how physicists explain their inability to find free quarks in the universe of today: To pull a quark out of one of the particles that quarks build means to fight an ever increasing force, an impossible task.

Back before the third microsecond of history, however, the quarks in the universe were too close together to form larger particles. The forces they felt from their nearest neighbors were too weak to bring them together, and the nearest neighbors screened each quark from the possible attraction of more distant ones. As the universe expanded, the distance between nearest-neighbor quarks increased until they felt a force strong enough to impel them together.

Under such an attraction a quark and an antiquark might come together to form one of the class of subatomic particles called mesons, or three quarks might form one of the baryon class (such as a neutron or proton) or three antiquarks an antibaryon. Particle formation is a self-encouraging process up to a point. When nearest neighbors have formed a particle, the particle no longer feels the color force, and so no longer screens the quarks on either side of it from each other. These, being more distant from each other, feel an even stronger attraction, and so hasten to make more particles. The saturation point is reached when the attractive force is so strong that, by the tension it sets up in space, a kind of stored energy effect, it spontaneously creates new quarks and antiquarks in pairs, which then reestablish the screening effect and put a damper on particle formation.

Crawford and Schramm say their theory does not directly lead from particle formation to such things as galaxies and clusters, but further work may show how to get there. However, clumps of mesons and baryons form that are so close together that they immediately become black holes with masses equal to that of Jupiter (up to 10^{30} grams or 10^{24} metric tons). Such black holes could solve two important cosmological puzzles: Does the universe expand forever? And what holds galaxy clusters together?

Galaxies appear to be associated in clusters. If these are not chance associations, but really bound together, there must be a lot of dark matter in them. The visible matter does not produce enough gravity to hold them together. Black holes of this kind are a good candidate. Enough matter in the universe as a whole could

My main criticism of humans is not that they are incapable of thinking clearly, but that they don't do it. They haven't taken the trouble to learn.

Give your child the gift that keeps on giving. The gift of intelligence— maximun effective use of his brain— mastery of his nervous system. A tool for life.

Letting "things" take care of themselves is a fine strategy; if it's working for you. If it's not, then you can try "managing" it. this goes for any aspect of life:

- money
- weight
- relationships
- spiritual progress
- intelligence
- health

If you're feeling and looking healthy and you eat junk food and crap, you don't have a problem. AND, if you're fat, stiff, out of breath, in pain and generally feeling "bad" and you eat junk food and don't exercize, you could think about it

★ Know what you don't want won't get you anything/where.

★ Having a clear vision/image/etc. of your goal actualizes it out of pure nothingness. Creation never ended.

Two kinds of freedom:

1. ~~with~~ ~~no~~ organized freedom
2. ~~———~~ chaotic "

Companies could become willing to consider "changing" its employee force 1) by getting new people or 2) be "transforming" the ones youive got.

Absolutes

1. Clarity of purpose – a written statement
   a) If you don't have one, we'll assist you in writing one.
   b) If you do have one, will determine its appropriateness and examine the possibility of rewriting it.

Clarity of purpose must be handled before we can go on.

at a "sufficient" level of clarity of purpose, we can move on to commitment, knowing we might need to continue clarifying purpose

IL[a]

(2) Real Commitment to that purpose.

In order to obtain true commitment, the purpose must be one that will inspire people. (on at least 2 levels)

1. monetary (paid assistants)
2. spiritual (unpaid assistants) • cohorts comrads fellows chaps thugs

(3) (4) (5) Alignment
Communication
Organization/Structure

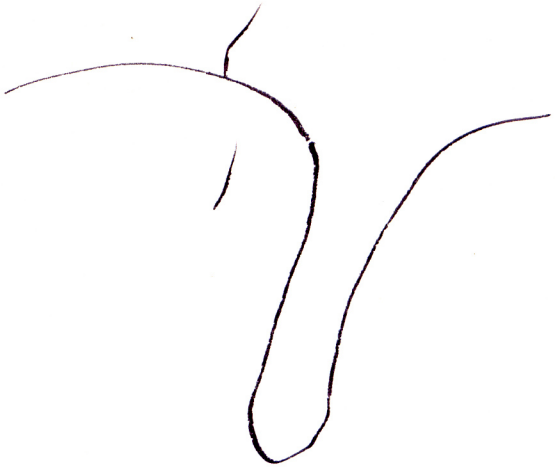

CAE will help clarify your purpose, then if we are in accord with your purpose we'll work with you on the next step.

We all create our lives. Some do it consciously/systematically. Some don't. No ~~right~~/right or wrong. Each has its advantages + disadvantages

Two kinds of Freedom: It's a free choice

1. w/ Timebinder, every day you "plan" your activities (actually you spend (7) min. in the morning and (2) minutes at night planning) then you do what you want.

2. I can do anything I want anytime I want as long as I show up at work almost every day almost all-day

~~A problem can be defined~~

I define a "problem" as the difference between (what you have) (what is) and (what you want) (what could be).

The Law of Conservation of Order

Order increases at precisely the same rate as entropy.

The old woman in front of me at Prigogine's lecture had a tooth with her in a small box. It had fallen out 2 days earlier while eating a sandwich.

what's the relationship between schizophrenia (symbolic dysfunction / 'mental' problems) and subtle division-making / problem-solving flows.) logical-error — a hardware explanation for logical dysfunction. If the hardware is "bad" and you know the nature of the structural flaw, you may be able to design alternate software that would operate adequately.

considering schizophrenia as a "single" disease is ~~operating at~~ confusing levels of abstraction.

AT LEAST CHOOSE CONSCIOUSLY

* when verbally "attacked" it's a good * strategy to ask why you're being attacked.
what did I do or say that you find offensive.
why are you so angry?

In E', "the" does not precede "truth", etc.

~~the truth~~ "a truth" or "my truth"

Our present "School" System reinforces the assumption that education is merely a phase in life, something that you outgrow, something that required special buildings and teachers, something you don't need once you've an Adult.

instead of an "Education/Growth" system that sees education/growth as our very reason for existing.

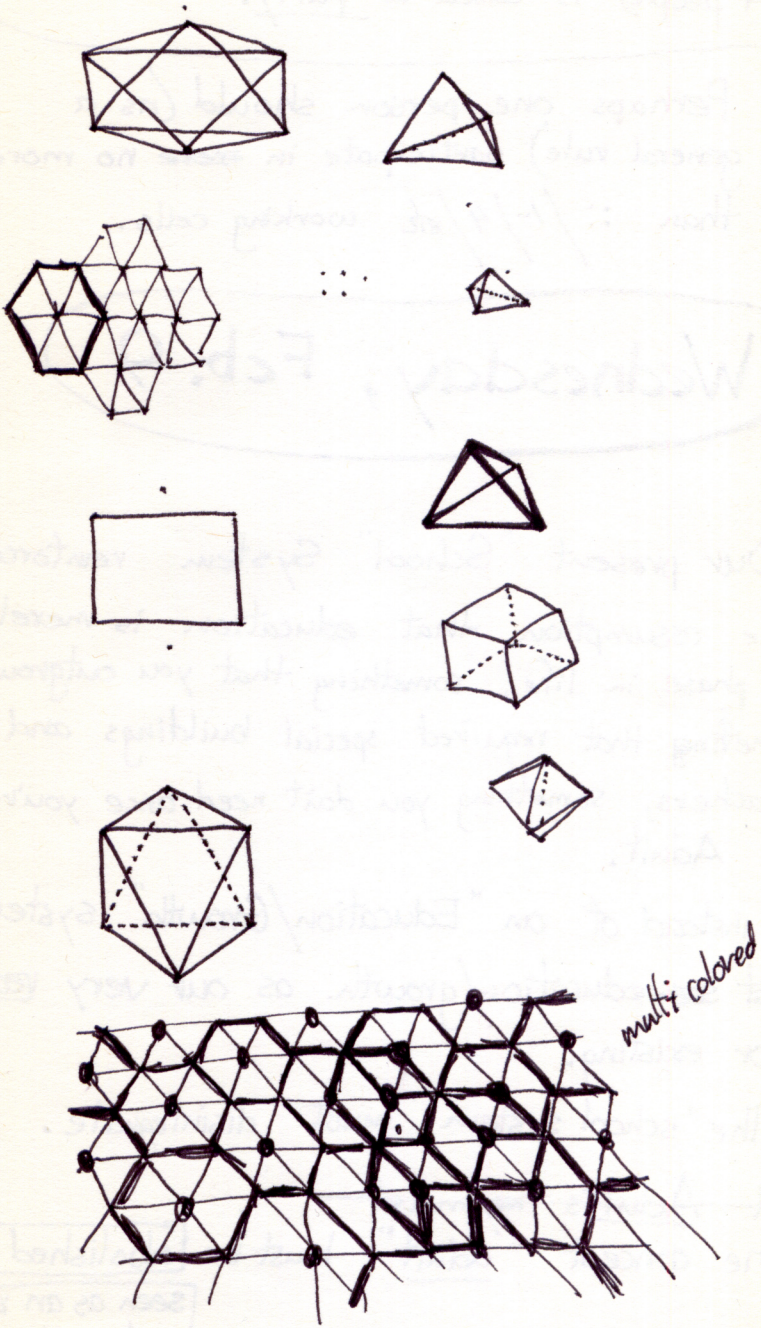

The 'school system' must disintegrate.

TO: Dr. S.I. Hayakawa

It has lately come to Our ears that you frequently and conspicuously pronounce sentences in public having an "is of identity" followed by a "snarl word"; e.g., "These students are fascists," "These students are crazed by dope," etc.

A scientific discipline known as General Semantics teaches that such sentences have detrimental effects on the nervous system of the user, contribute to neurosemantic disorientation, create confusion between the map and the territory, and lead to unsane behavior. A person habitually addicted to such sentences imitates animals in his nervous reactions, becomes dogmatic and categorical, loses the characteristically human consciousness of abstracting, and may even become so impassioned by neurosemantic primitive reactions as to commit crimes against property, such as attacking other people's trucks, tearing up other people's wires, etc.

There have been several excellent teachers of General Semantics abroad in the land during recent decades, and one of them, coincidentally, has the same name as you; if We were not aware that "the label is not the thing;" We might even think he was you. By further coincidence, this man when last heard of was also at San Francisco State College. We suggest earnestly that you should attempt to get in touch with him, if he can still be reached, and obtain from him some basic training in General Semantics principles.

He might also teach you something about neurosemantic relaxation. In the last photograph We saw of you confronting the dissidents, your entire face, shoulders, and body showed rigidity, neurosemantic "closedness," and the general nonverbal message, "Don't talk to me; my mind is made up." General Semantics might also teach you how to grow out of this infantile and primitive attitudinal set and function as a time-binding and open personality. Please get in touch with the other Dr. Hayakawa and give this a try.

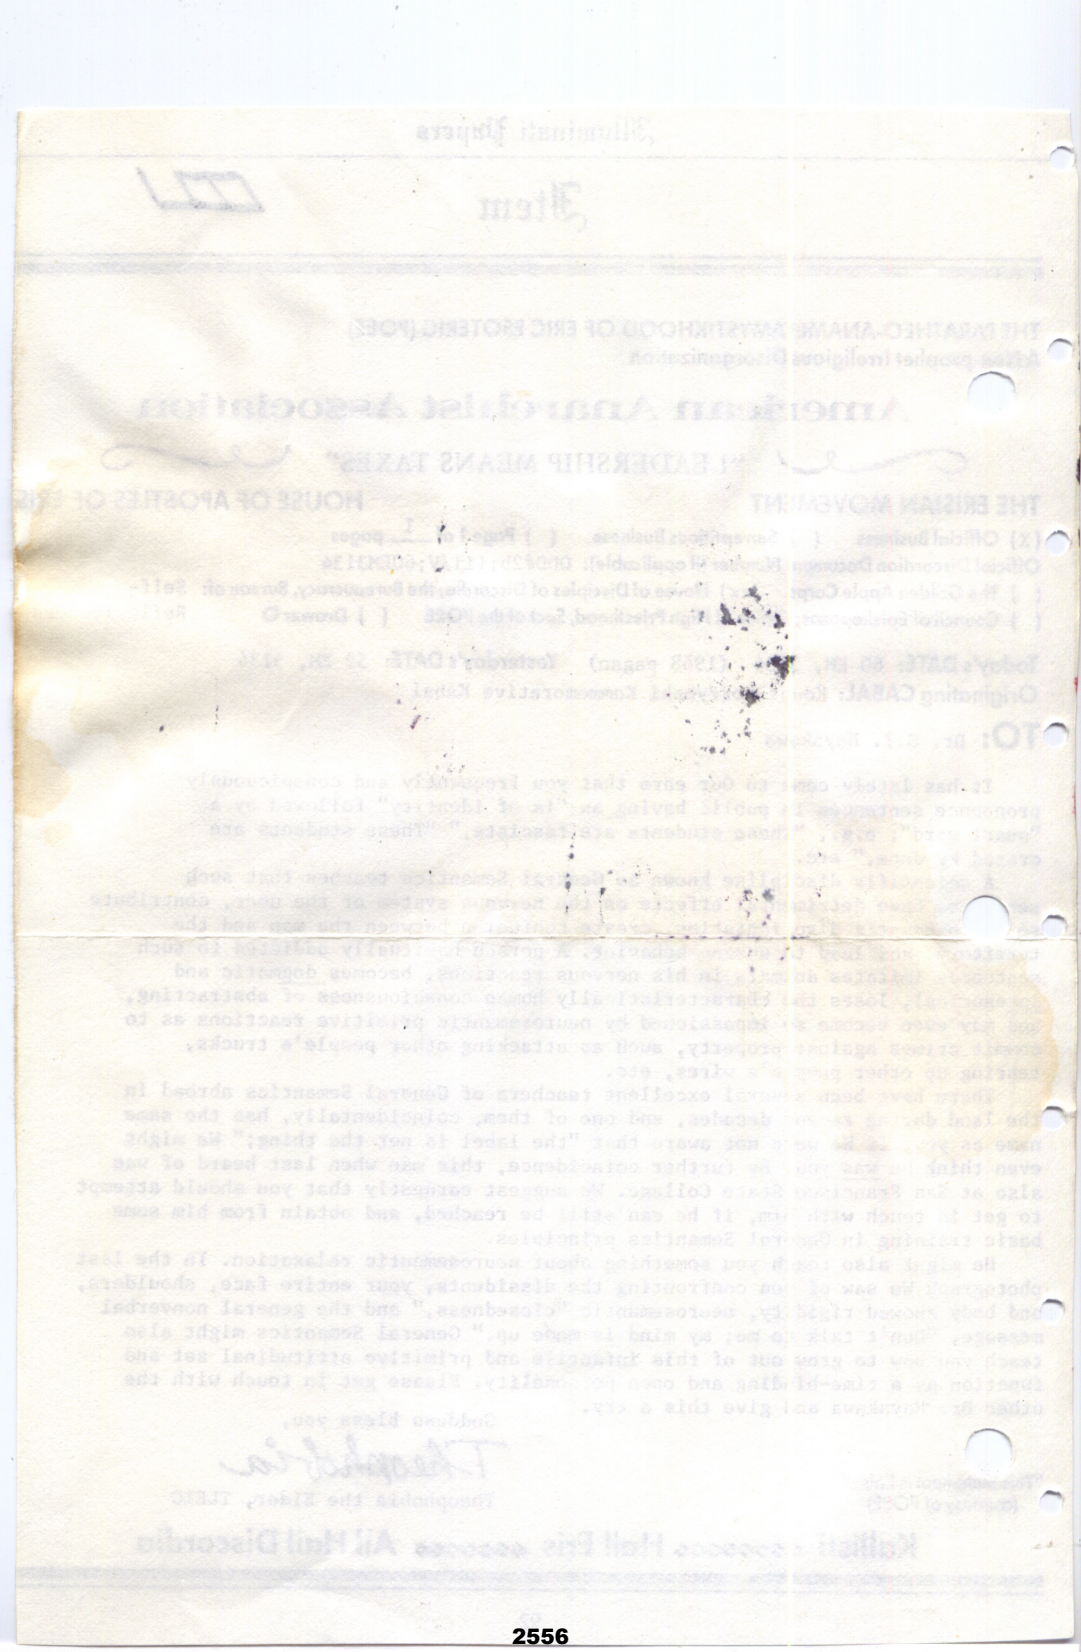

Goddess bless you,

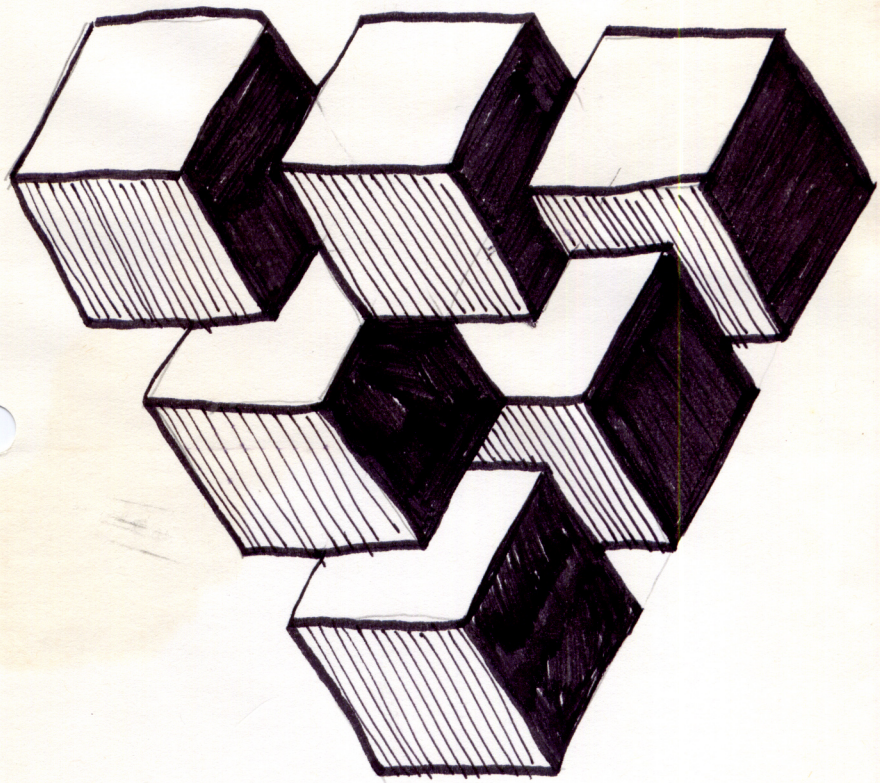

Theophobia

Divine Intervention in ourselves

Monday Feb. 28

Dennis thinks he doesn't deserve to be happy; that he hasn't earned the right to be happy.

Aaron is not burdened by these unproductive beliefs.

Dennis thinks that isn't fair that some people should be happy, rich, healthy, intelligent, handsome, loving, open, helpful, etc and others should be miserable, poor, sick, stupid, ugly, spiteful, narrow, greedy etc., and is reluctant to participate in the former while so many are in the latter category.

It seems to me, at this time, that "words" are not the basic unit of speech ★ Objective Reality is an attitude.

★ So is Subjective Reality.
A scientist delineates a ("segment"/~~sy~~subsystem) of Universe and "studies" it. ~~Then he probes and experiments and then he publishes this~~ results. Publishing results is an essential aspect of the (scientific process/science).

An Autobiography called
"How I do stuff"

A scientist is one who "marks off" a subsystem of Universe and "studies" it.
Then he publishs his/her results
Publishing is an essential ingredient in the (accumulating body of knowledge/process of science)

You don't have to be backed by a prestigous University and an $8,000,000 grant from the Rockafeller Foundation in order to do good "science".

Study your self (yourself) and publish your results (keep up with the current literature)

Objectivity [and/or] Subjectivity:

We don't have to choose between them. They both are useful attitudes/approaches at times. The ideal is to have both attitudes available and an ability to move quickly and flexibly from one to the other.

Love/Lust

why write this book
why read this book

Humans are not monogamous!

Preface
1. Love
2. Lust
3. Lost
4. Drawing Lines
5. The Language of Love
6. " " Lust

Love as context for living
Lust as content
7. Beyond Lust/Love

Lust/Love

is this book for men only, or women, or both,

ZZ-

Love has nothing to do with Lust. ★

Love is the relationship between the Self, the I and the rest of the Universe hopelessness of enforced monogamy.

" " " relationships of any kind.

Love is the state of trusting/assuming that God knows what he's doing, that Universe is developing/evolving in accordance the principles inherent in "Reality", that things are working out "properly". that whatever is happening is absolutely perfect.

Love is the starting point, not the finishing line. There is not finishing line.

Lust is our well-founded biological heritage.

Preface

Is the book directed at men?
Women? Both?
It is a statement of my reflections, thoughts, agonies, ecstasies, on this subject. It is ~~written~~ published for several reasons, ~~mainly~~ First as an offering to Evolution & to create my life as an Experiment with Evolution, Part of the Scientific Method is publishing your results. Sharing your thoughts etc. with others.

A note on "language" and "thinking".
There is no such things as "language" or "thought"
• include the "Wisdom Machine"?

ZZZ

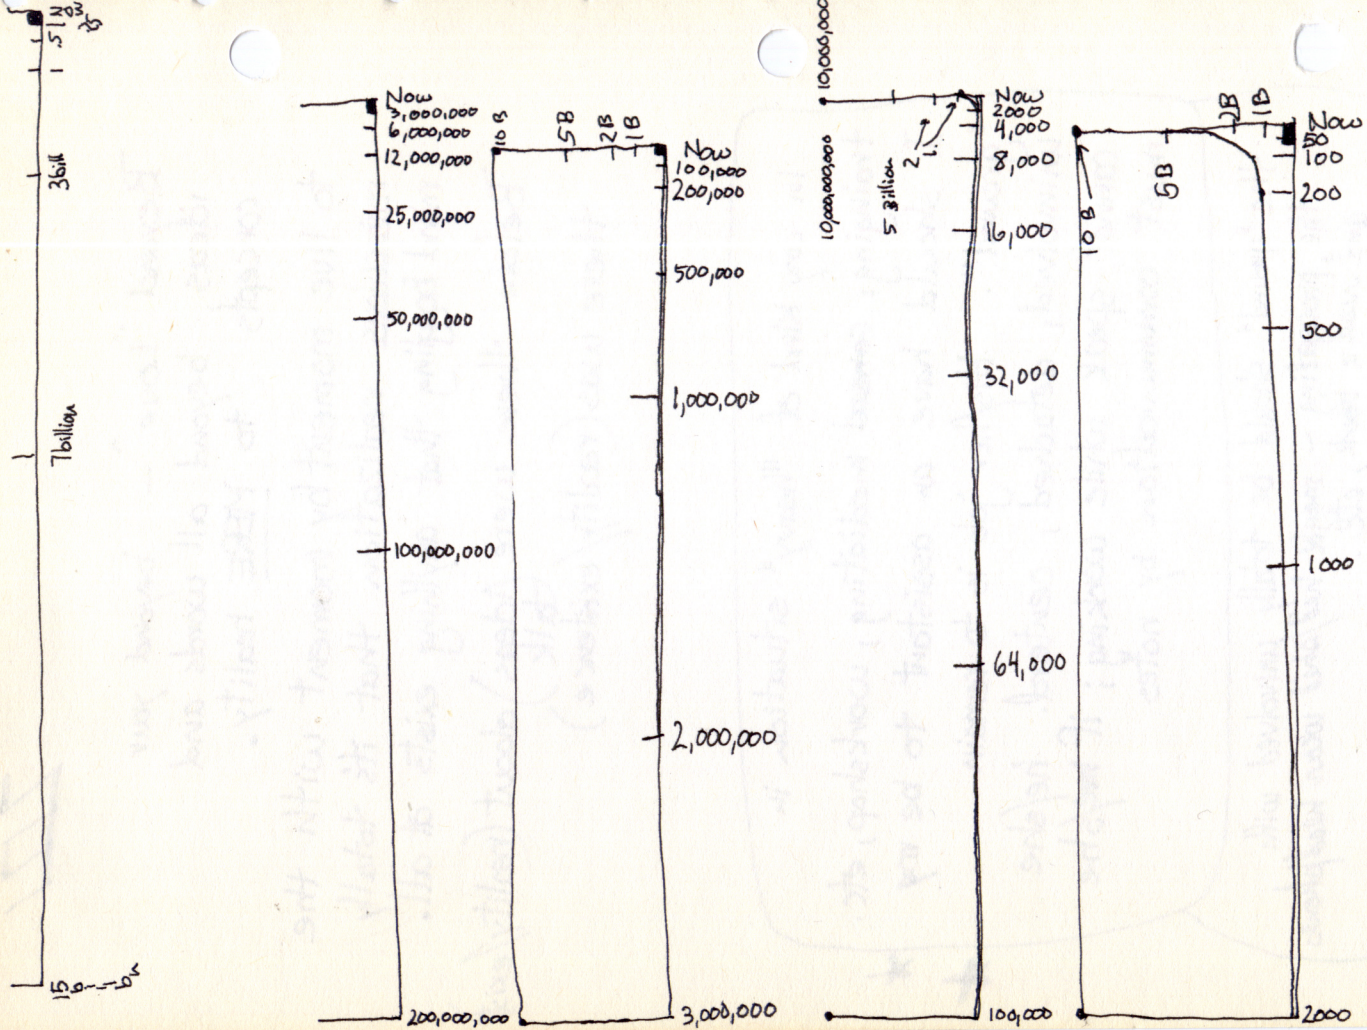

Beyond "Love" – beyond your ideas, beyond all words and concepts to MERE reality.

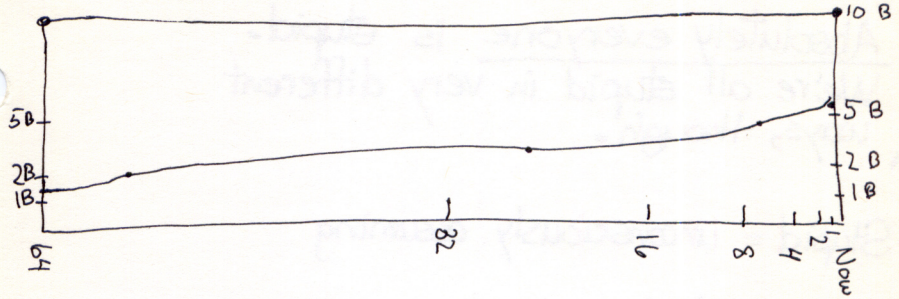

to live moment by moment with the miraculous realization that it's totally mind boggling that anything exists at all.

Before there were (ideas/talk) about (reality/exist) there was (reality/existence)

In any kind of "heavy" situation in trainging, ~~consul~~ mediating, workshop, etc. I should have an assistant to be my "ground". His/her job is to remain uninvolved, detached, centerd. he/she cannot speak while working; if ~~he~~/she must communication by notes ★ ★ the "ground" should be totally univolved with the proceeding – maybe he'd/she'd wear headphones and read a book, etc.

Absolutely everyone is stupid.
We're all stupid in very different ways, though.

Stupid = unconsciously assuming

We are all locked into our unconscious assumptions / our analysis of the situation.
There is no way to AVOID IT.
You cannot "THINK" without assumption.
Your only choice is whether they are CONSCIOUSLY CHOSEN/CREATED ASSUMPTIONS OR unconsciously "inhereted"/absorbed

In 1967, I had what some people called a transformational experience/born again x/awaking. I discovered that Dennis was living in a state of hypnosis/fiction
We live in a world of our own construction the rules/blueprint for that construction are contain in the structure of the English Language.
You can't "think" yourself into Reality/Heaven.
There is no way out of Hypnosis for Dennis I've spent the last 15 years trying to discover how to talk about that experience.

* In order to achieve anything, you might
* (must) first have a vision of the goal.
Not a vague one. It must be clearly and accurately conceived. In as much detail as you can. Language is the blueprint from which we construct and communicate or vision of our life

I "know" the Truth. But the verbal expression of that Truth is necessarily limited/inadequate/metaphorical – at best only an approximation – at most, a relatively accurate map.

Marriage may be thought of as a life-long commitment to Earth
Thus, "people" don't get married to other "people".
They each marry Earth.
